Activity: The Main Building is the oldest work of architecture at the University of Hong Kong. Classical in style, this well-proportioned, three-storey redbrick building is supported by granite columns of an Ionic order. The building is designed symmetrically around the central axis of a clock tower and features pairs of turrets at both ends of the principal façade. Pediments surmount the entrance portico and the elevations of the east and west wings. The building was constructed between 1910 and 1912, and was declared a monument by the Hong Kong Government in 1984.

In this two-hour workshop, participants will be introduced to basic architectural drawing concept - perspective. The introductory discussion will be followed by a sketching session of the Main Building and then an evaluation of participants’ work. This class is for beginners who wish to expand their knowledge of the foundational concepts of sketching.

Note: In case of adverse weather (but not falling within the scope of a typhoons or black rainstorm signal), the sketching exercise will take place at the Drake Gallery inside the Fung Ping Shan Building.

All materials will be provided. Weather may be unpredictable. Please consider bringing insect repellent, sunglasses or warm clothes.
